

Contents

Abbreviations	x
Acknowledgments	xii
Introduction	1
Chapter 1
The Character of Philosophical Influence in Pasternak's Early Prose	12
1.1 Safe Conduct : Farewell to music and the soul's stretched wings	16
1.2 Seeing the fate of philosophy "in the flesh"	20
1.3 Between Leibniz and Neo-Kantianism: Archival data and Boris Pasternak's Lehrjahre	24
1.4 The multi-voicedness of philosophical themes searching for literary nourishment	30
Chapter 2
Similarity and Contiguity in Pasternak's Early Poetics and Their Philosophical Underpinnings	38
2.1 Pasternak's "justification through metaphor"	43
2.2 The "unparalleled analytical clarity of Hume"	48
2.3 Perception, contiguity, and Immanuel Kant's a priori of time and space	54
2.4 Beyond "The Wassermann Test": Contiguities and their characterization in Roman Jakobson's essays and Boris Pasternak's early prose	59

Chapter 3
Arguing with the Sun in “The Mark of Apelles”	71
3.1 Poetry born in darkness: Toward an unwritten philosophical aesthetics	73
3.2 “I have dug into idealism to its very foundation”	87
3.3 The composition of “The Mark of Apelles” and its “vertical saturation”	92
Chapter 4
“Letters from Tula”: “Was ist Apperzeption?”	113
4.1 “Was ist Apperzeption?” Finding a fruitful approach to “Letters from Tula”	116
4.2 Between love and art in the world of reflections: The adjustment of the protagonists’ gaze	121
4.3 Searching for synthesis: Art, play-acting, and film actors from Moscow	135
4.4 Between to kalon and to agathon : Cohen’s Neo-Kantianism, the fire of conscience, and Lev Tolstoy’s gift of perception	142
4.5 Tolstoy, the Tolstoyans, and the living characters of fictional space: Autonomous transcendental consciousness versus a created living world of perceived and perceiving selves	152
Chapter 5
Contextualizing the Intellectual Aims of 1918: From “Letters from Tula” to The Childhood of Luvers	158
5.1 The “spirituality” of prose: “It is important to visit a person when he is whole”	161
5.2 “Three groups”: Three levels of reality in “Ordering a Drama”	173
5.3 The limitations of psychology: Neo-Kantians in dispute with David Hume	183
5.4 Beyond the metonymous self: Moving beyond traditional readings of the novella	193
Chapter 6
“The Long Days” in The Childhood of Luvers: Chronology of a Permeable Self	198
6.1 Transition from infancy to early childhood: Zhenya’s first awareness of the world beyond	199

6.2 Childhood: Acquaintance with still life and the quiet plasticity of the northern daylight	204
6.3 The boundary of spring and the outlines of the soul: New kindredness with nature at the appointed time	209
6.4 The boundary of summer: An infinitely expanding world approaching limits within the unlimited	220
6.5 Table I: Chronology of a permeable self: “The Long Days” of Detstvo Luvers	232
 Chapter 7
“The Stranger” in The Childhood of Luvers: Disruptions in Chronology and the Collision with Other Worlds	233
7.1 The boundary of fall: Erased faces of others and turpentine sun	236
7.2 Metaphoric narrative and spirits meeting at the threshold: Reading Lermontov’s Demon at sunset	249
7.3 What does Tsvetkov do? The world of the indefinable other	260
7.4 In the sanctuary of the sacristan Defendov	268
7.5 “Three Names” and the construction of the “Demonic” or spirit-bearing protagonist	277
7.6 Alexander Scriabin and “the freshness of his spirit”	281
7.7 Philosophical overtones of the indefinable Tsvetkov	287
7.8 Sensing transition: Temporal and spatial complexities of the conclusion	290
7.9 Table II: Disruptions of chronology and the collision of multiple worlds in “The Stranger”	295
 Chapter 8
Conclusion. Pasternak’s Symbolic World: Prose and Philosophy	296
8.1 Assessing Pasternak’s later view of his early prose	297
8.2 Metaphor and metonymy: Pasternak’s philosophical studies and their role in his early prose	302
8.3 New symbolism: Toward “the soul” of the later prose	319
 Bibliography	 327
Index of Works by Boris Pasternak	342
General Index	345