PAINTINGS
FROM BOOKS
THE PAINTINGS ON THE WALLS, THE BOOKS ON THE SHELVES. The library at Cragside, Northumberland, the home of the inventor and industrialist Sir William (later Baron) Armstrong, in the 1870s. (Photograph: National Monuments Record.)
PAINTINGS FROM BOOKS

Art and Literature in Britain, 1760–1900

BY RICHARD D. ALTICK

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY PRESS : COLUMBUS
To My Colleagues, 1945–1982
With Gratitude and Affection
CONTENTS

Acknowledgments xxi
Preface xxv

PART ONE: THE PICTURES ON THE WALLS

Introduction 1

Chapter 1. The earliest literary pictures: Hogarth, the theater, and the novel.—Ut pictura poesis and the theory of history painting.—The expanding variety of literary subjects down to 1800.—Paintings from history, fancy pictures, early genre, landscape. 11

Chapter 2. Eighteenth-century book illustrations.—Boydell’s Shakespeare Gallery.—Macklin’s Poet’s Gallery.—Fuseli’s Milton Gallery. 37

Chapter 3. A period of lethargy (1800–1830): Ut pictura poesis reinterpreted; the disappearance of the first generation of literary artists.—The “fortunate fall” of history painting.—The rise of genre, with subjects from literature.—Wilkie and the debate over Crabbe’s realism.—Landscape and Scott. 56

Chapter 4. The growing market for literary paintings and the shift of patronage; pictures as domestic decoration.—Books of engravings; the Art Union.—Keepsake beauties, their antecedents (fancy pictures, theatrical portraits) and descendants, the Graphic beauties. 71

Chapter 5. The taste of the new collectors: moral content valued over execution; taboos (nudity, “disturbing” subjects, political and social comments).—The tyranny of conventional sources and subjects; “standard” authors and “beauties” anthologies; the influence of engravings on popular demand; examples of neglected subjects and authors. 92

Chapter 6. Subjects reflected from nonliterary art: magic, fairies, sleeping figures, dreams, amiable humorists; domestic themes.—Suffering women, femmes fatales, coquettes, the satire of women.—Horses and dogs; shipwrecks, captivity, escapes and rescues, letter scenes, partings, deaths, trials and supplications, “discoveries.” 111

Chapter 7. Subjects from art history generate interest in subjects from literary biography.—Paintings from the lives of Shakespeare, Milton, and later authors. 138
Chapter 8. Artists' acquaintance with English literature.—Their adaptation of subjects from older art: the toilet of Venus, alchemist, Cymon and Iphigenia, Sigismunda, Endymion, etc.—The Westminster Palace frescoes.—The tension between artistic tradition and the “spirit” of the literary subject.

Chapter 10. The quality of art criticism, including journalistic wit.—The demise of ut pictura poesis.—The influence of preconceptions; artists' fidelity to the literary source an occasion for praise; quibbles over departures from the text; invented scenes.

Chapter 11. “Theatricality” a leading issue in criticism of literary paintings; the forces joining and separating art and the stage.—Costuming and the movement toward historical authenticity.—Caricature, “coarseness,” “vulgarity,” the desire for “poetry.”—The death of Leslie and the controversy over “realism” in Pre-Raphaelite pictures from Keats.

Chapter 12. The decline of literary painting: improving quality of art criticism, the developing pejorative connotation of “literary.”—Conclusion: What happened when people “read” pictures?; various degrees of understanding; the relevance of literary painting to literary history, and its critical usefulness.

PART TWO: IMAGES FROM SHAKESPEARE

Introduction

The Comedies

The History Plays

The Tragedies

The Romances

The Poetry
CONTENTS

PART THREE: THE REST OF THE GALLERY

Introduction 335
The Middle Ages 339
The Elizabethan Era 346
The Seventeenth Century 354
The Eighteenth Century 380
The Romantic Era 422
The Victorian Era 449
Appendixes 473
Notes 485
Bibliography 509
Index 515