URBAN LIFE and URBAN LANDSCAPE SERIES
CHANGING PLANS FOR AMERICA'S INNER CITIES

CINCINNATI'S OVER-THE-RHINE AND TWENTIETH-CENTURY URBANISM

Zane L. Miller and Bruce Tucker

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Columbus
For Henry
CONTENTS

List of Illustrations ix
Acknowledgments xi
Introduction: Why Cincinnati, Why Over-the-Rhine? xv
Prologue: 1850s–1910s 1

PART ONE
ZONING, RAZING, OR REHABILITATION

Introduction: From Cultural Engineering to Cultural Individualism 9

1 Social Groups, Slums, and Comprehensive Planning, 1915–1944 13

2 Neighborhoods and a Community, 1948–1960 29

PART TWO NEW VISIONS AND VISIONARIES

Introduction: Community Action and Neighborhood Planning 43
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Participatory Planning and the Downtown Renaissance, 1954–1964</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Redefining the Problem, 1950–1966</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Collapse of the Appalachian Option, 1964–1974</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Empowering the Poor, 1971–1975</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Integration through Historic Preservation, 1972–1980</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>The Separatist Counterattack, 1980–1982</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>The National Register Controversy, 1982–1983</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Separatists Victorious, 1983–1985</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Epilogue: Eclipsing the Public Interest
Appendix: The Major Housing Goal of the Over-the-Rhine Urban Renewal Plan, 1985
Notes
Index
ILLUSTRATIONS

Introduction
Over-the-Rhine, 1997  xvi
Cincinnati's neighborhoods, 1982  xvii

Prologue
Street map of Cincinnati, 1846  2
Cincinnati in 1875  3
Cincinnati's “Rhine,” ca. 1900  4

Chapter 1
Projected plan for the basin and civic center, 1925  20
Planning Commission's proposed basin redevelopment plan, 1933  24
The dense West End in 1930  25

Chapter 2
The age of residential structures by neighborhood, 1940  30
Projected population trends by community, 1900–1970 (1946)  31
Cincinnati's communities and neighborhoods, 1946  33

Chapter 3
Map of the central business district (the Core) and its surrounding areas, 1956  54

Chapter 4
West End neighborhoods, 1975  67
Chapter 6
Findlay Market, 1996 86

Chapter 10
Buddy Gray, September 1985 140
Jim Tarbell, June 1978 142

Epilogue
Racial residential segregation by neighborhood 160
Counties in the Cincinnati metropolitan area 162
Mourning Buddy Gray at his Drop-Inn Shelter 167
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project that yielded this book began in the early 1980s, and we have since then drawn on the assistance of more people than we can acknowledge here. Most important among them stands Henry D. Shapiro, who contributed seminal ideas for our exploration, prompted our interest in taxonomies of social reality, and helped draft grant proposals that produced the money to keep us going. The grants came from the American Association for State and Local History, the National Endowment for the Humanities (RO-20821-85), the Ohio Board of Regents Urban Universities Research Program and Linkage Grant Program, and the Murray Seasongood Foundation of Cincinnati. We are indebted to Nancy Grey Osterud for helping to prepare the project statement on which we based the grant proposals.

Others at the University of Cincinnati also helped us. The board of trustees provided in-kind matching support by granting Zane Miller two quarters of academic leave for researching and writing. The Department of History and the McMicken College of Arts and Sciences made it possible for us to try out our ideas in the give and take of teaching. At the undergraduate level this took place in the Laboratory in American Civilization (a research seminar), in a McMicken College special topics honors course on the politics of the neighborhood organization revolution, and in a summer continuing education course on recent trends in city and neighborhood planning. We hope that the students learned as much from us as we did from them, particularly Robert Burnham, Penelope Cunningham, Theresa Eisenberg, Jana Morford, and Rose Vitale. This project also insinuated its way into the department's graduate level instruction through its Frontiers of Urban Research seminar, out of which came several useful papers, theses, and dissertations, especially those of Robert Burnham, Charles Casey-Leininger, Bradley Cross, Jon Dowling, Roger Hansen, Andrea Korablhuh, and Rose Vitale. Kevin Grace in the Department of Archives and Rare Books and Karen Kotts, Sally Moffitt, and Donald Tolzmann of the reference department at the University of Cincinnati Libraries graciously responded to our requests and often guided us to sources we otherwise would have overlooked.

Maureen Sullivan and the staff of the Urban Appalachian Council, especially Brenda Saylor, helped locate material on Appalachians in Cincinnati, and Michael Maloney shared both his knowledge and personal archival collection on the Appalachian ethnic movement in Cincinnati. Loyal Jones, then director of the Appalachian Center at Berea College, and Shannon Wilson, archivist of the Hutchins Library at Berea, provided welcome assistance and encouragement.

The project benefited, too, from researchers who worked long hours at meager wages. These included especially Bruce Tucker, who joined us on NEH support as a research associate. He wrote two of the twenty-three chapters of the initial typescript and several drafts of chapters 4 and 5. Elliot Shapiro and Lisa Thomas conducted careful newspaper research, and Ellen Cangi prepared a long oral history with Harris Forusz.

Several people helped us dig up hard-to-find information. At Cincinnati's city hall we relied heavily on Charles Nuckolls in the clerk of council's office, Ely Ryder in the city solicitor's office, and Charlotte Birdsall (now Thompson), Christopher Cain, Ed Mangold, Steve Schuckman, and Dan Young in the Department of City Planning. Franco Ruffini of the Ohio Historic Preservation Office located, photocopied, and mailed to us important material, and Bruce Goetzman donated his collection of documents and newspaper clippings on the Over-the-Rhine historic designation controversy. W. Joseph Dehner gave us access to the records of the Queen City Housing and Heritage Preservation Development Corporations, and Jon Hughes contributed choice selections from his folio of photos of sites and events in Over-the-Rhine. We also learned a great deal informally from members of the Ohio Historic Sites Preservation Advisory Board and Cincinnati's Historic Conservation board, on both of which Zane Miller served during the 1980s when these two bodies figured prominently in the story we tell.

Others helped us in equally important ways. Hope Earls, the administrative secretary in the history department at the University of Cincinnati, provided us with working materials and technical and managerial assistance, and even found time to type clean copies of parts of the manuscript and other items related to the project. Evelyn Schott efficiently, patiently, and promptly typed the second draft and four revisions of the manuscript that finally became this book. Barbara Hanrahan, director of the Ohio State University Press, supervised the transformation of the manuscript into a book, and Lynne M. Bonenberger applied diligence, judiciousness, and good taste in copyediting our work.

To these acknowledgments we add the name and memory of Nancy K. Shapiro, who not only constructed excellent oral history interviews but also provided us a model of intelligence, curiosity, commitment, good humor, and wit, even in the face of an illness that ended her life just as the book began to take shape. She and the others acknowledged here share in whatever merits readers might find in this book. The authors are responsible for its shortcomings.

Zane L. Miller