ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This study, which grew out of my doctoral dissertation on “Social Structures in Molière's Major Plays,” presented at the University of Pennsylvania, owes its primary inspiration to my adviser and mentor, Jean V. Alter, whose pioneering work on social criticism of early modern literature has always been an example worthy of emulation. I also owe special thanks to Gerald Prince and Joan DeJean, who have provided ongoing advice and encouragement, and to Ralph Albanese, Jr., and Harold Knutson, whose generous and thoughtful comments helped shape the final manuscript.

A stipend from the National Endowment for the Humanities allowed me to complete important research work that contributed to this book, and a research grant from Southeastern Louisiana University provided help in preparing the manuscript. Among the institutions that gave me access to their collections and assistance with my work, I would like to thank the British Library, the Bibliothèque Nationale, the Bibliothèque de l'Ar­senal, the Bibliothèque Sainte-Geneviève, and the libraries of Harvard University, Louisiana State University, Northwestern University, the University of Pennsylvania, Southeastern Louisiana University, Williams College, and Yale University.

I am grateful to Claudia Duczer, Bobbie Threeton, and Glenda Wellington for their careful preparation of the type­script. Nancy K. Hymel, my research assistant, also provided invaluable assistance.

Portions of chapters four and five appeared originally in Papers on French Seventeenth Century Literature and L'Esprit Créateur under the titles “Usurpation, Dominance, and Social Closure in L'Ecole des femmes,” and “Ménage versus Salon in
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

"Les Femmes savantes." These passages are included here with the kind permission of the journals.

Above all, I owe thanks to my wife, Josephine Roberts, without whose steadfast love, support, loyalty, and collaboration this project could never have been brought to fruition.
SOCIAL STRUCTURES IN MOLIERE’S
THEATER